

Mr
Sausage Roll

Celebs Doing Stuff
"Nice Pins"
Digital design

The Worlds a Stage
“Lifes a bubble”
Digital design with wood and
rough paper textures

The Worlds a Stage
 "Calm before the storm"
 Digital design, watercolour
 and biro drawing on paper

The Worlds a Stage
 "New beginings"
 Digital design, watercolour
 and biro drawing on paper

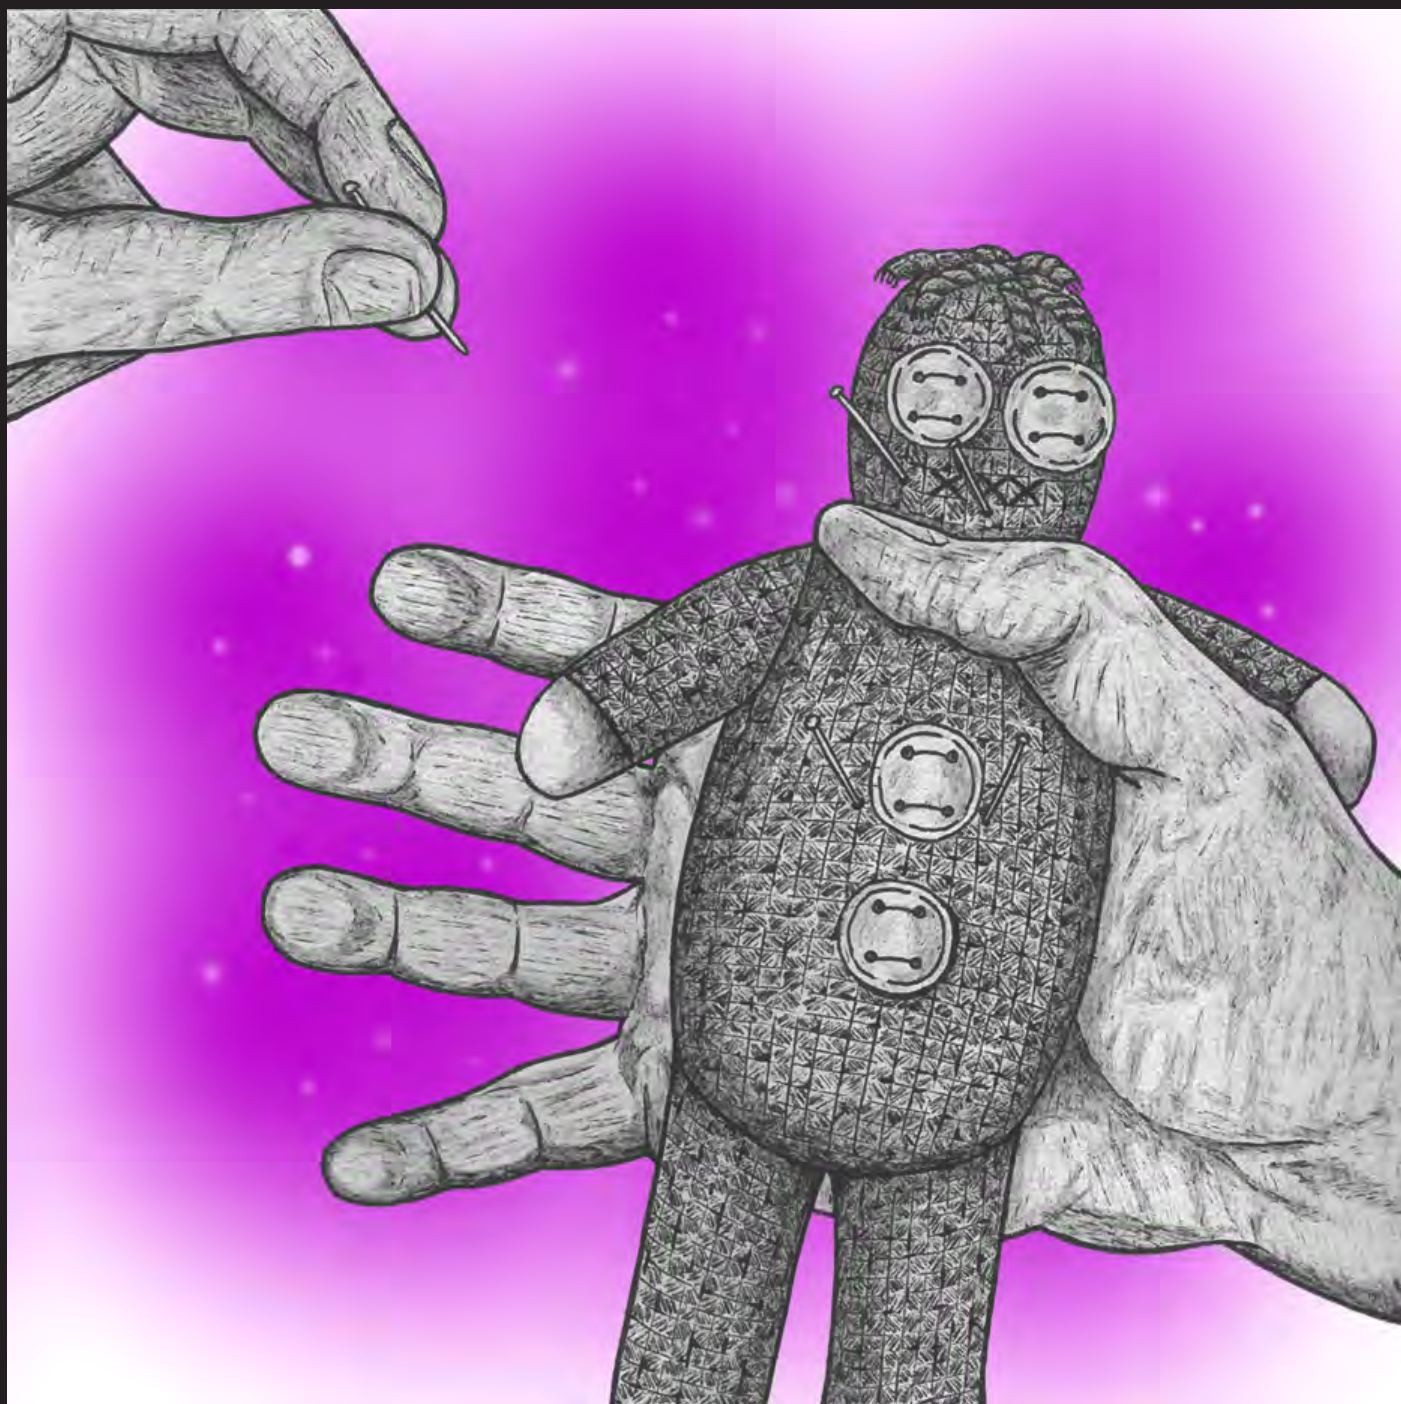

World Childrens Day
“Icing on the cake”
Digital and watercolour

International day of elimination of violence against women “Why”
Digital and watercolour

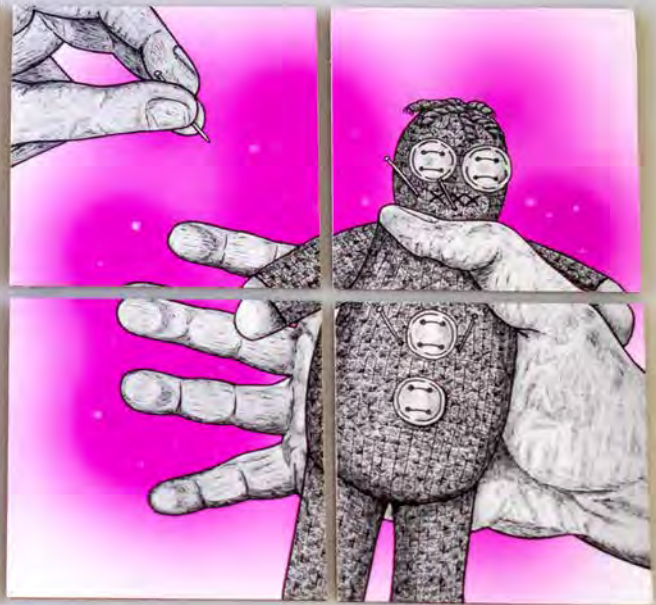

Graduation Project
“Who do Voodoo”
Biro drawing on textured paper,
digital colouring

Graduation Project
"The Curse"
Biro drawing on textured paper,
digital watercolour

So, there was a woman that came into the tattoo studio and asked for a name to be tattooed on her wrist. I asked her politely whose name it was and whether it was her child's name or partner's name. She replied, "It's my boyfriend's name". So, I asked her how long she had been with her partner to which she replied, "About two years but it's all going well". Anyway, she told me the name which was Andy and said that she wanted it on the lower part of the wrist. I immediately told her that it would be best placed about an inch further up her arm. This was because there has always been a bit of a curse when it comes to having a partner's name tattooed and by having it placed slightly higher up would give me or another artist room to cover it up at a later date if it was necessary. Anyway, she said she had no problem with her having his name tattooed on her. So, I carried on and completed the tattoo and the customer went away with a big smile on her face. To my surprise the woman turned back up at the studio about two hours later, crying her eyes out and rushed over to me. She then started demanding that she wanted this name covered up right away. She said to me "I showed my boyfriend the tattoo and he said... 'You're a fucking idiot, I'm fucking done with ya' and stormed off. I said, 'I told you there was a curse when it comes to having a partner's name tattooed on you, but the problem is I can't cover it for at least two weeks or until it's fully healed'. She then started crying again and said that she would have to find some other artist that would cover it up straight away as it was too painful to look at. After she left, I instantly thought about the film Toy Story and how "Andy" had discarded Woody from his toybox (Andy's name was drawn on Woody's foot) ...Anyway I never saw her again.

So, there was a woman that came into the tattoo studio and asked for a name to be tattooed on her wrist. I asked her politely whose name it was and whether it was her child's name or partner's name. She replied, "It's my boyfriend's name". So, I asked her how long she had been with her partner to which she replied, "About two years but it's all going well". Anyway, she told me the name which was Andy and said that she wanted it on the lower part of the wrist. I immediately told her that it would be best placed about an inch further up her arm. This was because there has always been a bit of a curse when it comes to having a partner's name tattooed and by having it placed slightly higher up would give me or another artist room to cover it up at a later date if it was necessary. Anyway, she said she had no problem with her having his name tattooed on her. So, I carried on and completed the tattoo and the customer went away with a big smile on her face. To my surprise the woman turned back up at the studio about two hours later, crying her eyes out and rushed over to me. She then started demanding that she wanted this name covered up right away. She said to me "I showed my boyfriend the tattoo and he said... 'You're a fucking idiot, I'm fucking done with ya' and stormed off. I said, 'I told you there was a curse when it comes to having a partner's name tattooed on you, but the problem is I can't cover it for at least two weeks or until it's fully healed'. She then started crying again and said that she would have to find some other artist that would cover it up straight away as it was too painful to look at. After she left, I instantly thought about the film Toy Story and how "Andy" had discarded Woody from his toybox (Andy's name was drawn on Woody's foot) ...Anyway I never saw her again.

Graduation Project
"Cursed Coasters"
Digital print on low tac adhesive paper, mounted on card

Along time ago in a Galaxy far, far away...

A friend of mine came into the pub (Dangerous Dave) and started showing off his new tattoo. He was absolutely buzzing and really proud of what he had just got done. Me and a number of people that were in the pub at the time were all curious why he had got this huge tattoo of a guitar, musical notes and the word "merkin" in giant letters running down from the top part of his arm. He turned round to everyone and said, "I got this tattoo because it represented my favourite band at the moment that are called the merkins". So, I asked him if he knew what the word "merkin" meant and he said, "NO! Enlighten me". At this point I started laughing my head off and told him that the word "merkin" meant fanny wig. In all my days I've never seen a person's facial expression and colour change so fast in all my life. To begin with he didn't believe me, but after a quick Google search... I proved to him what the definition and the meaning of the word was. Then I managed to increase the level of his embarrassment by showing him all the different types of fanny wig that were available to buy on the internet. This included one in the style of the Star Wars character Chewbacca and even had a bandolier. The entire group of people erupted into childish laughter to the point where some of the people were having difficulty breathing. Anyway, my friend could not stand the embarrassment and turned around to everyone saying that he was going to get the tattoo removed as soon as possible and ended up leaving the pub totally red faced. The only thing that I can say about this incident is that if you're going to have any words tattooed on your body, please Google search any that you don't recognise before committing to them, it will definitely save you any embarrassment and a lot of money in the future if you need to get them removed.

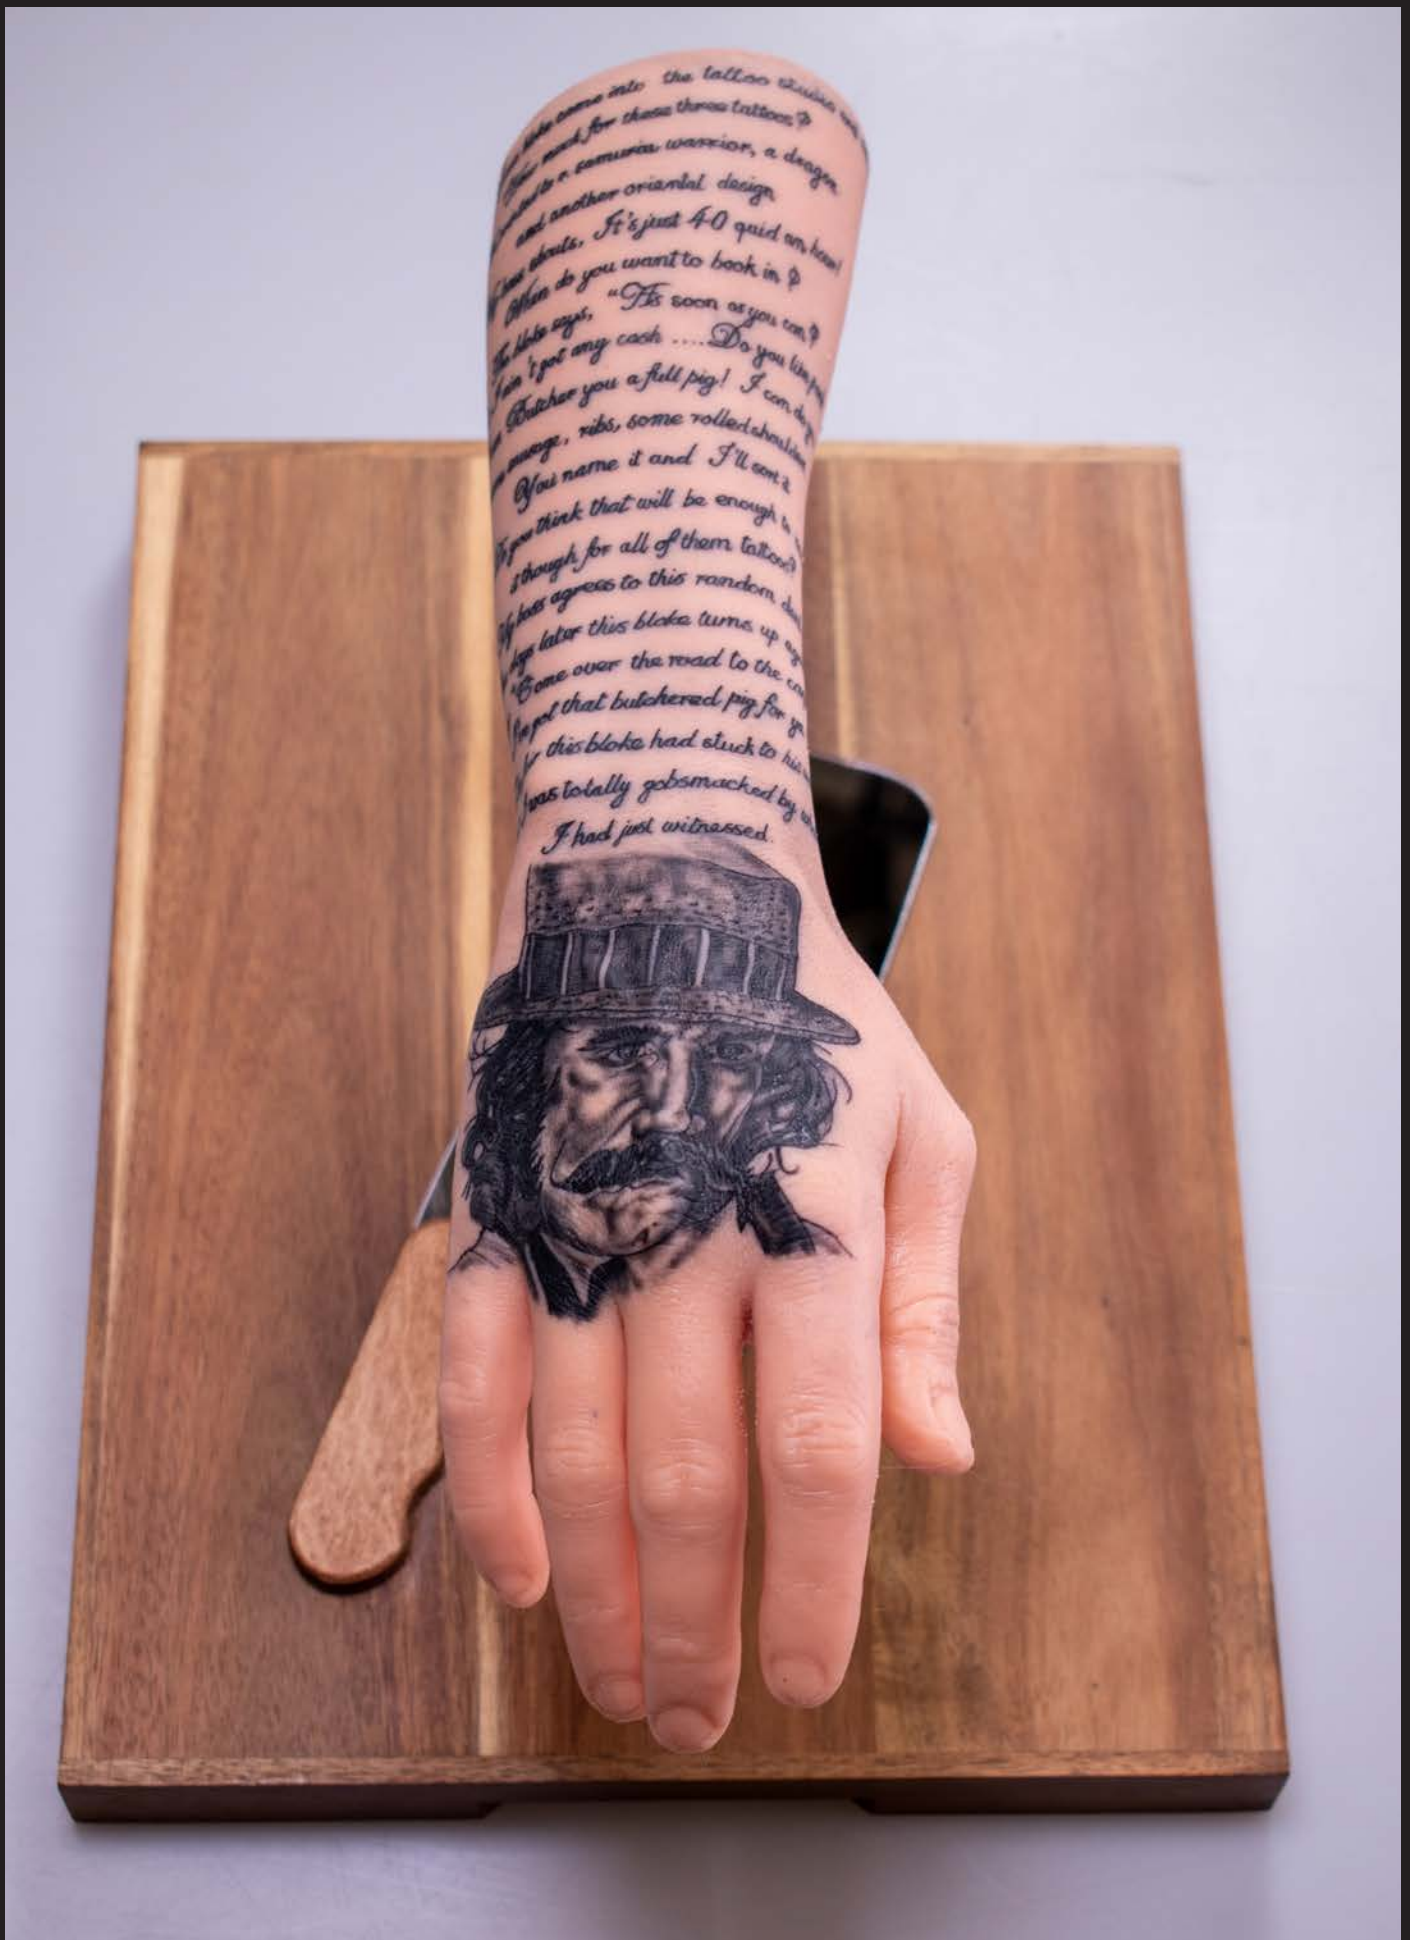

Graduation Project
"Salacious Ohh Crumbs" Biro drawing on textured paper
and watercolour

Graduation Project
"Mmm..."
Biro drawing on textured paper
and watercolour

Graduation Project
"The Empire Lays Back" Digital print on suede backed cushions

Graduation Project
"The Butcher"
Tattooed silicone arm mounted on board with mirror cleaver

